In the 20th century, planetarium domes spurred the invention by Walther Bauersfeld of both thin shells of reinforced concrete and geodesic domes. The use of steel, computers, and finite element analysis enabled yet larger spans. Tension membrane structure became popular for domed sports stadiums, which also innovated with rigid retractable ...

As I have argued previously, the health reform debate reflects competing visions of fairness and the good society. It is a debate between those who believe that health care is a right and those who want to treat it as just another commodity. The details of the proposals change continually and are likely to change even more once the AHCA moves ...
